Sandor Rosenberg, President and Chief Executive Officer of IAI, credits Stan Reese, Senior Vice President and Chief Operating Officer, for the 2020 turnaround due to the new contracts he has won and the excellent team he has assembled.

"In the third quarter we completely reversed our losses from the first half of the year," Reese said. "Since May, we have increased our billable workforce by over 80% under new long-term, large-scale contracts. We anticipate that these contracts will provide a solid foundation of revenue and profitability for the foreseeable future. This has allowed us to shift our focus from maintaining operations to meaningful growth for 2021 and beyond.

"Our capabilities when it comes to modernizing legacy systems such as COBOL-based systems, no matter how large, we believe are second to none. We now turn our attention to investments in corporate infrastructure and business development. Pursuit of strategic partnerships with synergistic emerging technology companies, as well as merger & acquisition opportunities, are also part of our plans."

Reese further commented, "While COBOL-related legacy system modernization is expected to remain a core competency, we recognize that expanding our service and product offerings is necessary to carry us through the new decade. We believe that our extensive roster of satisfied clients could prove appealing to prospective partners in high-growth fields such as cloud services and cyber security. We remain excited about the Company's future for the long-term benefit of our shareholders."
